

A-State students grab hands and bravely take the plunge. The Polar Plunge is an annual charity event aimed at raising money for the Special Olympics organization.

Volunteer A-State representatives looking over the cold water before jumping in.

Aftermath of the Volunteer A-State group participating in the Polar Plunge.

Volunteer A-State accepting the award for most money raised. The plunge raised $946 for the Special Olympics.

Wet footprints scatter the floor as the plungers run inside away from the cold to dry off.

Brave representatives from 747 jump into the cold, shallow water with flags.

The participants gathered together for a time of appreciation before the plunge.

Students involved with Alpha Omicron Pi laugh at their friend who jumped before them.