

"Star Children" Exhibit at the Bradbury Art Museum

The latest exhibition at the Bradbury Art Museum, "Star Children," is now open for public viewing. Museum Curator, Melissa Wilkinson stated, "This exhibition is intended to affix a celebratory gaze upon members of the LGBTQ+ community and experience. Each artist has been chosen and included by means of honoring and dignifying individual creative expressions of the identity." With a temporary restriction to 60 gallery visitors at a time, the museum is open from noon to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday.

This lovely piece, "Dillon" by Joey Brock, is a mixed media photographic collage, measuring 49 x 39 inches.

This self portrait by Robert Mapplethorpe, features the "martyr and prophet of the LGBT and kink movement," stated Melissa Wilkinson, owner of the piece.

Joey Brock's mixed media photographic collages (from left), "Hope," "PH," "Catherine," "Tommy" and "Tammy" are included in the exhibit.

"Hubris (Duality)", a sculpture by Kevin Kao, features among the many detailed gallery pieces in the "Star Children" collection.

Vibrant gallery pieces included in the exhibition. The three smaller pieces (from left), "Cake Day," "Spooky Season" and "Leo Still Life" are digital photographs by Brick Kyle. The larger two pieces (from left), "We All Fall Down" and "Pocket Full of Posies" are mixed media pieces by Keith Buswell.

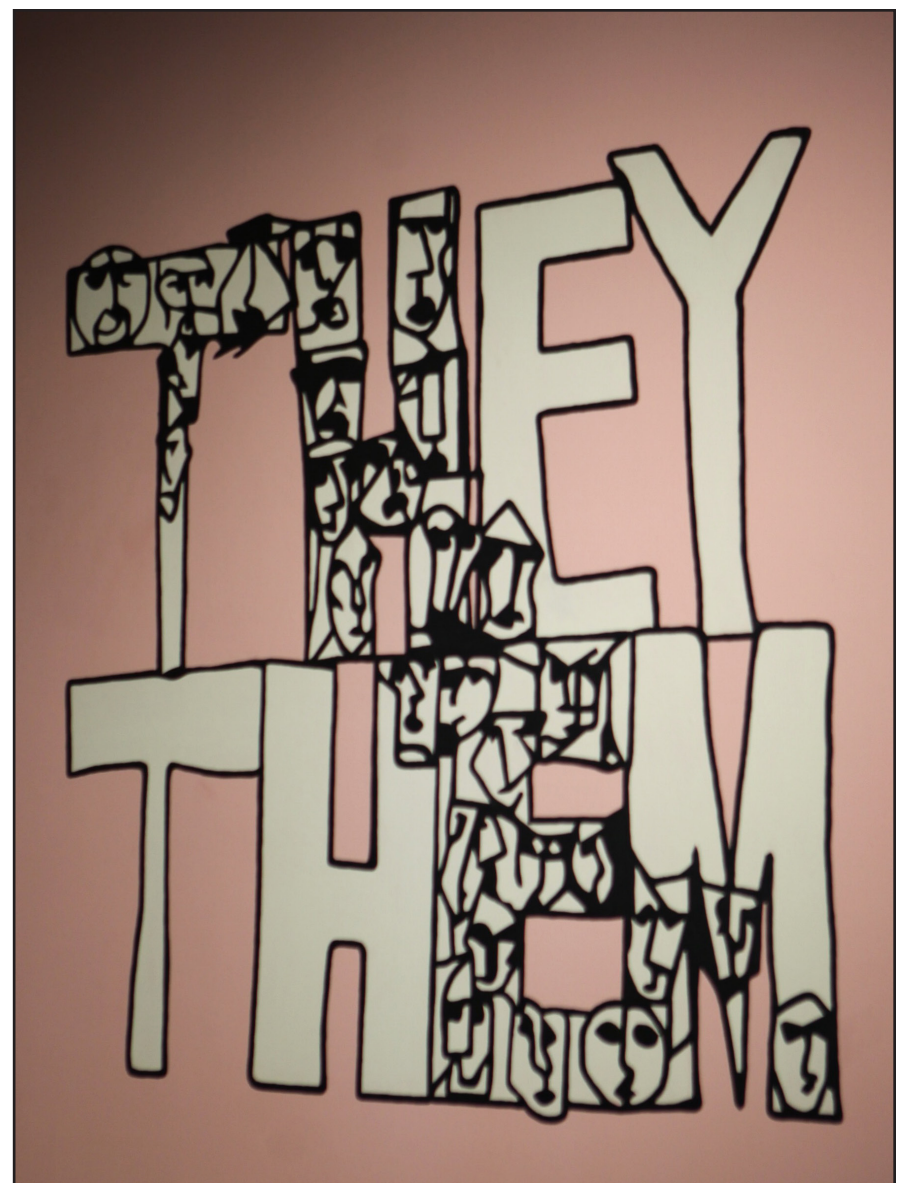

Kevin Kao's ceramic sculpture, "Hubris (Tell)." The "Star Children" exhibition will be available for viewing at the Bradbury Art Museum until the closing reception at 5 p.m., April 1. For more photos, visit the "Star Children" photo gallery on the Herald website, theherald.home.blog.

Gallery pieces, from left, "Overlook Overlooking," "Just Us" and "Between Shadows," are photographs embellished with hand embroidery by Rachel Trusty.

Melissa Wilkinson's piece "Chimera Series" features in the "Star Children" exhibit with a large pink wall and a disco ball.

A 2D translation of a sculptural work highlighting transgender and non-binary individuals by Cedar Thomas, painted by Haley Voges.