HELPING HANDS OF A-STATE

1. PHOTO ILLUSTRATION: Henry Carraway, a sophomore mathematics major from Conway, Arkansas, demonstrates how to place a ticket onto a vehicle. Carraway has been a parking enforcement officer for a year. He said his jobs involves a lot of walking around and an extensive knowledge of A-State's parking regulations.

2. Yatri Rai, a first-year nursing major from Nepal, scoops rocky road ice cream at The Sweet Shoppe. Rai said she normally works at Freshens, but was asked to work a shift at The Sweet Shoppe.

3. Jamarius Mosley has been a library assistant in the Dean B. Ellis Library since the beginning of the fall 2024 semester. Mosley is a first-year game design major from Jonesboro.

4. Skylar Forest has been a temp custodial worker for a month and a half. He said he hopes to soon be hired full time so he can take advantage of the tuition discount offered to staff and apply to attend A-State.

5. Nursing majors from Nepal Amrita Rai (left) and Sarishma Regmi take boxes to the dumpster. Rai, a first-year student, has worked at Freshens for a month and Regmi, a sophomore, and has worked there for two years.

6. Richard Bueno mows the grass on campus. Bueno has worked for BrightView, a landscaping company which has a contract with A-State, since August 2024.

7. Avitrea Johnson, a senior clinical lab sciences major from West Memphis, Arkansas, speaks to students in the Multicultural Center. Johnson is completing a work study where she works the front desk, answers questions, cleans and helps check students in.

8. Garrett Partain, an A-State graduate, works his second day at the Campus Store. Partain said he had previously worked in the store for a year, but came back to the store after graduating in May as a transition job.
