Attendees also shared details about the violence. “Teenagers as young as 15 were shot at very close range,” one attendee said. “They were only asking for free speech and a country without corruption. The state did not protect them. It silenced them.”

On Tuesday, the situation escalated. Protesters set fire to the houses of the Home Minister and the Finance Minister. They also set fire to the parliament building and Singha Durbar, a key government complex in Kathmandu that houses many offices, parliament meeting rooms, and state media.

Following the protests, he Prime Minister has resigned from his position. For some, the gathering was about more than sadness; it was a call for the world to act. “Nepal is bleeding. The world must not stay quiet,” an organizer said. “We need action, accountability and change.

When the victim woke up on Sept. 4, he noticed that the bank had flagged the check deposits as fraudulent and taken the amount back out of his account. At this point he realized it was a scam. Sept. 4 | 10:30 p.m. Corporal Custodio was dispatched to the intersection of Aggie Road and University Loop East in reference to a hazardous driver. Upon her arrival, Custodio noticed a black pick up was parked on the sidewalk at the intersection of Aggie Road and University Loop East. She then tried to make contact with the driver of the vehicle. She advised him to roll his window down multiple times, but he did not respond. The driver had his eyes open and was moving but was not listening to commands given. Once more officers arrived on scene, the driver then rolled his windows down. Custodio identified the odor of intoxicants emitting from his person. She then asked the driver to step out of the vehicle. At that time the driver exited the vehicle and was stumbling and falling while trying to walk without assistance. Sgt. Oswalt attempted to identify the driver while Custodio searched his wallet. Custodio discovered three false drivers licenses out of the state of Georgia. A valid license was never located. The driver was identified as the suspect. While speaking with the suspect in regard to the false ID cards, Custodio noticed that he had bloodshot watery eyes, slurred speech, and was incoherent when speaking. The suspect was placed under arrest. The suspect was placed in the rear passenger seat of Custodio’s marked patrol unit and seatbelted for safety. She then transported the suspect to Craighead County Detention center. At 11 p.m., Custodio escorted the suspect to conduct a blood alcohol content (BAC) test. She read the suspects his rights and all proper documentation was filled out. Once the BAC test was completed, the final breath test results concluded a BAC of .225%.

The suspect was booked into the Craighead County Detention Center for careless and prohibited driving, possession of counterfeit drivers licenses, and driving while intoxicated. Sept. 4 | 1:44 p.m. On Sept. 4, the complainant told Officer Billy Branch that the parking gate at 2319 University Loop had been broken. In reviewing video, Branch found that the listed vehicle had caused the damage by slowly attempting to drive under the gate. In doing so, the gate arm broke. A check was made in our system which showed on June 27, the suspect was the driver of this vehicle involving a traffic stop that was conducted by one of our officers.

After the meeting, both the new and the old senators participated in a SGA summit. Malone said the summit was held to give basic information to the new senators and serve as a refresher for the older members. “Let’s see what we can change on campus this year and do for the betterment of all students,” Williams said during his meeting report.

Delgadillo said he was excited to see two universities in Arkansas finally playing against each other, something that does not happen often. “I heard for years about the possibility of a game between the Red Wolves and Razorbacks and now that it is happening, it is a must to come and support A-State,” Delgadillo said. While the Red Wolves ended up falling to the Razorbacks, fans from all over the state were able to come together and root for their favorite Arkansas team.
